särskild, adj. eg. separate, several, private; ofika different; en helt annan distinct; i vidare bem. particular, special, especial, proper [every muscle of the body has its p. office] [Syn. Special and especial are considered as the same; the adjective special is more used than especial; but the adverb especially is more used than especially. Special is that which comes under the general; the particular is that which comes under the special. Hence we speak of a special rule and a particular case. Different has two meanings; one opposed to same, the other to similar. Things may be very different or infinitely various. Any thing may serve as a mark: a stroke, a dot, a stick set up, and the like. The sign is something more complex; it consists of a figure or representation of some object, as the twelve signs of the zodiac. However, in application to moral matters of a purely intellectual nature, mark is synonymous with sign: as, a mark of honour, distinction; — an outward and visible sign of inward and spiritual grace. Token is a species of mark in the moral sense; indication, a species of sign: a mark shows what is, a token serves to keep in mind what has been; a gift to a friend is a mark of one's affection and esteem: if it be permanent in its nature it becomes a token. Note is rather a sign than a mark; but it is properly the sign which consists of marks, as a note of admiration; or, in the moral sense, the sign by which the object is known; as, they who appertain to the visible church have all the notes of external profession. A badge is a mark simply of distinction, as, gown and wig is the badge of gentlemen in the law. Symptom is rather a mark than a sign; it explains the cause or origin of complaints: as, a foaming at the mouth and an abhorrence of drink are symptoms of canine madness. Metaphors and tropes are figures of speech: the olive and laurel are symbols of peace; a lamb is an emblem of innocence; the paschal lamb was the type of Christ.]; ~, (pl.) af en orden insignia; till ~ af, till ~ att, as a sign of; in token of; ~ till att ..., signs of ...; indication of ... A will, when it operates upon personal property, is sometimes called a testament, and when upon real estate, a devise; but the more general denomination of the instrument, embracing equally real and personal estate, is that of last will and testament. A will may contain several devises, bequests, or legacies. A common testament is a testament made jointly by several persons. A mystic testament is a form of making a will which consists principally in enclosing it in an envelope, and sealing it in the presence of witnesses; is also called a solemn testament. A legacy is a particular thing or certain sum of money given by last will tro, I. f. belief; relig. samt i bet. af heder o. ära faith; i förare bem. äfv. credit; credence; trust; trosbekännelse äfv. creed; öfvertygelse äfv. persuasion [Syn. Of belief, faith, credit, and trust. belief is the generic term; the others are specific. We believe when we credit and trust but not always vice versa. Belief rests on no particular person or thing, but credit and trust rest on the authority of one or more individuals. Belief and credit are particular actions or sentiments; trust and faith are permanent dispositions of the mind. Things are entitled to our belief; persons are entitled to our credit; but people repose trust in others; or have a faith in others. Belief, trust, and faith have also a religious application, which credit has not. Belief is simply an act of the understanding; trust and faith are active moving principles of the mind. Belief is to trust and faith as cause to effect; there may be belief without either trust or faith: but there can be no trust or faith without belief. Belief is common to all religions; trust is peculiar to the believers in Divine revelation; faith is employed by distinction for the Christian faith. With regard to creed, faith has always a reference to the principle in the mind. A creed is a set form of faith: hence we say to be of the same faith, or to adopt the same creed. The holy martyrs died for the faith; every established form of religion will have its peculiar creed. In reference to fidelity, faith denotes a mode of action, namely, in acting true to the faith which others repose in us. Fidelity itself is a disposition of the mind to adhere to that faith which others repose in us. We keep our faith: we show our fidelity. Compulsion, coercion, and force are more active in their signification than constraint and restraint. Compulsion and coercion are never used to express the force a person exercises on himself, but only in relation to others; restraint and constraint may be applied to one's self. A government is said to use coercion to make its subjects conform to the established religion. A traveller delivers his purse to a robber under compulsion. A person exercises constraint upon himself unwillingly: and he exercises restraint upon himself, or upon his feelings, from a sense of duty. The forms of civil society or public opinion lay proper constraint upon the behaviour of men, and make them agreeable to each other.]; med ~, by force (ett. coercion); compulsorily, constrainedly, coercively; utan ~, without constraint; unconstrained, unforced; bruka ~, use force; lägga sig ~, lay constraint upon one's self; constrain one's self; sällskapslifvets ~, the constraint of society. -fri, -lös, adj. unconstrained, unrestrained. -löshet, f. absence of constraint; unconstrainedness. -sarbete, n. compulsory work. -sarbetshus, n. compulsory workhouse. -försäljning, f. enforced (ett. compulsory) sale. -skurs, m. enforced (ett. compulsory) rate. -köp, n. forced purchase. -slag, m. compulsory law. -slån, n. enforced loan. -smagt, f. compulsory power; coercive power. -smedel, n. means of coercion. -små, n. matter of coercion; se tvång. -spligt, f. compulsory duty. -srätt, m., -srättighet, f. right of coercion. -stillstånd, n. state of constraint (ett. coercion); state of confinement. -tröja, f. strait-jacket; strait waistcoat. -sundervisning, f. compulsory instruction. -åtgärd, f. compulsory measure.
